Explanation of Buckley changes -

The FBI proposes changes to 20 U.S.C. Section 1232(g) to expand the provision allowing for governmental access to educational records upon service of legal process to include "statutorily authorized compulsory process issued for a . . . counterintelligence purpose." This reference is intended to encompass national security letters (NSLs). Currently, absent a court order applicable only to counterterrorism cases, the FBI generally cannot obtain wire or electronic communication records held by educational institutions that provide telephone or internet service even when a non-educational entity, providing the same service in the same manner, would be subject to an NSL. This amendment is intended to permit service of an NSL upon educational institutions which meet the definition of "wire or electronic service provider" under the Electronic Communications Privacy Act or "financial institution" under the Right to Financial Privacy Act. Further, the amendment permits an educational institution to voluntarily provide to the FBI, upon written request, certain items of information, including, but not limited to, directory information, without the restrictions that currently exist for access to such records. The changes are designed to facilitate FBI counterintelligence investigations that have arisen from the recent tremendous increase in the number of foreign students studying in United States educational institutions from countries known to engage in intelligence activities against the United States. It is well established that foreign intelligence agencies use student status as a tool to get intelligence officers and cooptees into the United States to engage in intelligence activities that are not subject to the controls and protocols that would otherwise attend their functions were they diplomats. Further, international terrorism organizations use student status as a method of getting their operatives into the United States with minimal effort and scrutiny, as well as to gain an education in science and technology-related fields that can serve their terrorism goals.

Explanation of ECPA changes -

The FBI proposes to clarify the scope of the ECPA NSL provision, 18 U.S.C. Section 2709, which currently provides for access to records of wire and electronic communications providers. The proposal would replace the "toll billing and transactional record" reference with "records and non-content information," and would specify that the term encompasses access to the types of records that are currently available in the criminal context, under 18 U.S.C. Section 2703(c). As the statute currently is worded, the reference to "toll billing" records, in some cases, has limited the information that telephone companies are willing to provide to only those telephone calls for which it bills. That is an enormous limitation in many cases upon the amount of information that the FBI can obtain from telephone companies. There is no indication that Congress intended such a restriction upon the availability of information when it enacted ECPA. The adoption of the language from the criminal section includes use of the term "telephone connection records," which would enable the FBI to obtain all call information, including incoming and outgoing local and long distance telephone calls, regardless of whether the customer is separately billed for the call. Further, another change includes the addition of the term "remote computing services" (RCS) to the enumerated list of providers covered by this section. This is a clarification of Section 2709, which currently encompasses "wire or electronic communications service providers," and would appear to include RCS providers inasmuch as Section 2703 refers to an RCS as a storage facility for wire and electronic communications. This amendment simply spells out the inclusion of RCS providers as being subject to an ECPA NSL.

I am an OGC/NSLB attorney who was asked to handle a matter that you had previously discussed with [redacted] concerning issuing an NSL under the Right to Financial Privacy Act to obtain bank records.

I have a copy of the NSL that you are using, but I must advise you right now that you need to stop using it. First, it is an old pony, inasmuch as it sets out an old standard for getting NSLs, namely one in which the subject of the request was an agent of a foreign power. The standard is much different now, since the 2001 Patriot Act, inasmuch as we only need to show that the information is relevant to an authorized investigation. Secondly, your unit chief has not been delegated authority to issue the NSL. So you cannot use this form.

I have a document entitled "Spikedlegation," which sets out the various people who have been delegated authority to sign NSLs, the first set having been established after the Patriot Act (AD, DADs, SACs, various OGC attorneys), and the latest delegee, Spike Bowman, the senior counsel for national security affairs in our office, having been given such authority a few months ago.

Under separate cover, I am going to send you the form NSL that you should be using for financial institutions. It comes from the NSLB web page, where you can pull up national security letters from a list on the left side of the web page, and then you will see a description of NSLs and a reference to a November 2001 EC, and if you click on that, you will get a listing of all the NSL forms. But I'll send it to you separately.

I think we need to figure out what to do about the information you've gotten in the past under these NSLs. I am going to check the RFPA statute and will get back to you.

[redacted] are you available to meet on Friday at 10 am here in OGC (Room 7975) to discuss this matter. In the interim, could you or [redacted] please find out about how many NSLs have been issued under his signature. [redacted]

The RFOA basically states that banks cannot give out information and the government cannot accept information unless the bank receives legal process, such as a GJ subpoena, administrative subpoena, court order, or an NSL. Further, there is a separate requirement that information cannot be furnished unless a proper certifying official states that all the requirements of the RFOA have been complied with [redacted]

I just sent an email to [REDACTED] which I copied you on, but which needs explanation. I talked to [REDACTED] boss, [REDACTED] and he explained to me that this letter, which he knows is not a legal NSL, is used only with respect to the Federal Reserve, whereby there is an arrangement, as discussed in the prior email, to get info from the Federal Reserve based on a written request, not an NSL. I talked to Spike about this, [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] I tried to call, but since you're out of the office this afternoon, you're getting this e-mail instead.

b6 As you can see from the below message [REDACTED] the NSLB attorney who I approached with b7C my concerns over the NSL you were directed to issue by TFOS, would like to get a copy of the 11/08/04
 EC you received from them. Can you e-mail me a copy or give me the serial number where we can find it

Can you email me the EC from TFOS on 11/08/04, or give me the number so I can get it from ACS. I agree with you that this is unacceptable, and I really can't fathom any reason that justifies it. But it is easier for me to approach TFOS if I have something ni hand. thanks [REDACTED]

b6 [REDACTED] we need to meet with TFOS. They are getting substantive information from the Federal Reserve, and b7C then asking the field six months later to issue an NSL for the information. No can do. . . I thought we'd resolved this a few months ago, in my conversation with [REDACTED] wherein he assured me that they were not getting any substantive information absent an NSL and that they were only finding out from the Fed as to whether it had information on a target, and, if it did, then it would issue the NSL.

We've got a problem here.

Do you know Spike? He is the senior counsel here at OGC, and I got him involved because once I saw the EC, I couldn't figure out any legitimate basis for it, so I thought we had to cut this off right now, before any discussions or excuses or anything. So Spike is going to talk to the DAD.

My "training" can take the form of telling them what they can and cannot do, including in the latter category sending out NSLs under TFOS signature, sending out NSLs as a request for finding out if the federal reserve has information, NOT having a properly issued NSL prior to receiving information. I'll wait to hear from Lewis, and maybe remind him next week, through Spike, that he needed to get back to me as to the facts (per Spike's email).

Do you think "NSL Training" for the section is in order? Do you think this is an issue where they truly don't understand the legal requirements or they are just seeking to circumvent them?

I talked with John Lewis - he will put a stop to it, get facts and probably ask you to come in soon to give training on NSLs. He asked if there was any "how to" available and I pointed him to the web site.

Spike: had a sit down today with the A/SC to go over the issues you presented and a couple of things have happened. He has sent out an advisory e-mail to all of his Unit Chiefs, he has scheduled a meeting with the POC at LX1 to make sure we are following the latest and best legal guidance re use of NSLs, and finally when the Section Chief returns on Tuesday I'll ensure he gets a clear message from me on this issue. I think we're good to go here. Any more from you on the issue of referring this?

Effective immediately, any requests made of the Federal Reserve Bank for transactional information may ONLY be made through the issuance of a National Security Letter (NSL) or federal grand jury subpoena. TFOS units will discontinue their use of any letter previously provided the FED to obtain such information.

TFOS management will be meeting with OGC next week regarding this issue.

Please ensure all Unit SSAs and professional support are so advised. Thank you. [REDACTED]

I appreciate your and [REDACTED] taking time next Wednesday, 12/8/04, to meet with me, UC [REDACTED] and A/UC [REDACTED] at 1:00P so we can discuss this matter and explore some options. I am arranging to have the CTD Conference Room, Room 4330, available for us. Should the room number change, I will let you know. As you are aware from an email I sent earlier today to TFOS management, we will ensure any transactional information requested of the FED is done so only through the issuance of an NSL or FGJ subpoena. [REDACTED] I've enclosed the powerpoint presentation that I often give on the issue of various investigative techniques, including NSLs, business records, FinCen, tax records, educational records, etc. I add things as people make me aware of them. If you think there are items I should add, thus spreading the word on what you do and what field investigators should be doing, please let me know. But for now, the slides on NSLs are what I intend to discuss tomorrow (unless you want me to address other techniques), so you might want to circulate this at some point. I don't need to do it as a powerpoint tomorrow, though, since I assume we will not have the equipment.

see you tomorrow at 10.

p.s. If I get there early, can I come in, and watch the preceeding discussions/presentations?

No, I'll just do this myself. I think it would make it seem like we are minimizing its importance if we put it off. We had originally scheduled it for yesterday, and [REDACTED] wanted to put it off because of how she was feeling. I don't think it sends a good signal to put it off again. But do I have your permission to offer up NSLB's services, as far as drafting the NLS, assigning an attorney to sign off on them, etc. I think [REDACTED]

Julie, did the memo to CTD and CD go out on the issue of service of NSLs? Because the issue had arisen partially in the context of trying to get NSLs to when we have emergency situations. It was not clear that

So, before I give TFOS the bad news can we see where we are with these matters. Can we offer up again, to help here, and then come up with some solution on service?

As with CAU, it's hit and miss. Sometimes they'll get inundated with numbers that they need to check out quickly; other times their requests can wait the issuance of an NSL. But even on routine matters, I gather that it takes a long time to get an NSL served [REDACTED]

This is a situation in which I am not sure I am going to get an accurate answer [REDACTED]

But this has been an ongoing problem, which originally came to our attention probably almost a year ago when [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] And they promised that is what they would do. Then last summer I happened to pass by the fax machine [REDACTED] and saw that they'd faxed or were about to fax a letter to the [REDACTED] asking for information on someone under the signature of TFOS. Doing exactly what they were not supposed to do. So [REDACTED] and I met with TFOS a few weeks ago and they explained to us [REDACTED]

So the service issue is huge here. It was at a follow up meeting with TFOS, that I attended alone, a few weeks ago that generated my contacting you about how we solve this problem of service. Service was their main complaint, even more so than actually producing an NSL.

So to answer your question directly, I don't have numbers but I know we have a problem.

The memo to CTD and CD did go out. How big a problem is this? Every NSL can't be an emergency.
